Quality Training

Encompass trainers are supported by our talented professional associates – experienced practitioners, with the expertise to deliver quality training in specific areas as required.

All Encompass workshops are highly interactive, allowing participants at any level of experience to build on their existing knowledge and skill. Our training caters for workers in both government and community services. In fact, we specialise in cross-sector sharing of knowledge.

Our Trainers

Chris-Maree Sultmann

B. Social Work (Hons).

Chris is an exceptional training facilitator, known for her expertise and fresh approach. She has worked for nearly 30 years in child protection and family support, including extensive experience in the development and delivery of training for human service organisations across the government and community sectors. She wrote curriculum and taught undergraduate and postgraduate students in the School of Social Work and Human Services, University of Queensland for several years and has been an Editorial Consultant for the Children Australia journal for many years. Chris uses her understanding of the latest research to assist training participants to integrate contemporary knowledge with their practice.

Paula Redford-Bell

Bachelor of Arts, majoring in welfare, psychology, drama and theatre, Master of Child and Adolescent Welfare (Distinction).

Paula is an extremely skilled trainer with over 20 years of experience in work with children, young people, their families and carers. She is passionate about learning and development for workers and supervisors in the frontline of child protection and family support work. Paula brings an interest in reflective processes to her highly interactive workshops and a focus on supporting participants to develop their knowledge and confidence in practice.

Anita Webster

Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Social Administration, Graduate Certificate in Management, Master of Social Work, Accredited Mediator.

Anita, an accredited mental health social worker, brings over 20 years of experience in child and family counselling and support work to her training development and facilitation work. Her child protection experience in both Australia and the United Kingdom informs her delivery of every workshop, enriching the learning and development of participants.

ACCREDITED TRAINING NOW AVAILABLE WITH ENCOMPASS

Encompass has formed a partnership with Queensland East Coast TAFE to offer accredited training in some of our workshops. This means that some workshops you complete with us can provide you with credit towards a TAFE qualification.

For The record - effective case notes for child and youth work

Recording – particularly making case notes – is essential to effective child and youth work but can be difficult to do well. This highly interactive workshop examines the science and the art of recording in various contexts, with a focus on case notes. Learn how to write well-structured documents which achieve their purpose as tools to help protect and support children and young people. Participants will learn to apply the ‘rules’ for succinct but effective recording, including efficient and useful case notes, assessment notes and action plans, and well-supported practice decisions.

Who should attend? Government and community agency workers, family support workers, youth workers, foster and kinship care support workers, intervention service workers.

“Made me think about what should go in my case notes, what is needed, rather than putting things in out of habit.”

The SaFa® training series

The SaFa® training series is underpinned by Encompass’ speciality focus on risk assessment and on working to help create safer families, able to meet children’s and young people’s needs for safety, security and self-worth. The shared theme of each of the SaFa® training sessions is relationship as the medium for building the capacity of families to be safer families, even if unable to care full-time for their child or young person. While the SaFa® training series are stand-alone workshops, there are benefits from attending both sessions.

Who should attend SaFa® training? Child protection workers in government and community based services, including Family and Child Connect, intensive family support, statutory intervention services and FIS, foster and kinship care support, reunification services and Family Wellbeing services. Both experienced workers and those newer to the field will benefit.

SaFa® training – Risk assessment in action: the art of judging risk in child protection

29/03/2018

Safety and risk assessments are foundation skills for effective child protection practice, underpinning all decisions about safety and support. This comprehensive workshop uses evidence-based knowledge to develop participants’ understanding of the concepts central to risk assessment in contemporary child protection practice. Beyond a core understanding and skills-base in child protection, this workshop challenges participants to examine how they apply knowledge in practice. Practical exercises, using frameworks which reinforce good quality assessments, enable participants to increase their competence in making comprehensive assessments and defensible decisions.

SaFa® training – The relationship route to safe families: integrated planning

TBC

When faced with multiple complex issues and the involvement of multiple agencies, it can be difficult to ‘hold it all together’ in working with families towards the possibility of change. A commitment to client-directed planning can seem at odds with ‘imposed’ goals around child safety, and working with other agencies to ensure integrated support planning brings its own challenges. This workshop examines:

- effective inclusive support planning with families whose lives may appear chaotic
- inclusive planning in which the process itself engenders hope and promotes change
- working through relationship to craft effective responses and avoid drift of focus.

19/04/2018

Are the Kids OK? - being child-aware while supporting families

Targeted at anyone working in a support role with families and young people, this workshop is a popular favourite which regularly receives rave reviews by participants. All who work with families, children and young people must have as their focus the safety and well-being of the children. An ability to assess the risk of harm, and to recognise both protective factors and indicators of danger, is crucial. This one day workshop provides an opportunity for participants to develop their knowledge and skills specific to work with families where the well-being of children is a focus. Participants will have the opportunity to apply core concepts and knowledge to their own practice context.

Who should attend? Workers providing early intervention and family support services; people who work with young parents and families in crisis; workers in housing, DFV, and health services.

“ This is an area where there were a lot of grey areas for me – this training really clarified those. ”

TBC

High Voltage – working with ‘high risk’ adolescents

Work with ‘high risk’ adolescents can carry shock potential – for young people themselves and others around them, including front-line workers. Workers often face the tricky challenge of providing an immediate response to extreme and dangerous behaviour by young people, in order to provide safety, while at the same time trying to connect with the hidden pain, trauma and unmet need underpinning this behaviour. This carries the inbuilt conundrum of maintaining a planned approach in the face of continuing crisis. If you are grappling with this ‘high voltage’ work then this is the workshop for you. It is informed by the AIM4® concept map, which supports a practical and effective approach to working with vulnerable young people, grounded in contemporary thinking and research.

Who should attend? Workers in statutory and community services who work with young people with complex needs and challenging behaviour, including child safety, juvenile justice, education settings, residential care, youth services.

“ Challenged my thinking and will change how I go about what I do at work. ”

Weaving the Tapestry – applying relationship based parenting approaches in family support

Parenting approaches have changed significantly with the emergence of attachment theory and neuroscience based understandings. How do we use this advanced knowledge in practical everyday parenting? This workshop takes you on a journey of discovery towards applying attachment principles in the daily parenting of children and invites you to consider how you use this knowledge in your family support work. You’ll have an opportunity to understand Circle of Security™ concepts and how to talk about these with families you support. Parenting approaches that strive to control behaviour do not respond to children’s underlying needs and feelings. Relationship based approaches such as Circle of Security™ allow parents to see behaviour as a form of communication. This workshop will give you an overview of these approaches so that you in turn can support the parents you work with.

Who will benefit? Family support workers, foster care support workers, family intervention workers, child safety staff, child care workers, anyone who provides skills development and support to the families or carers of young children.

Pursuing Possibility – using appreciative inquiry to transform your work

Interested in opening up the possibilities for real and positive change in your work with families? Wondering about how to transform the culture and temperament of your workplace? This is the workshop for you! Participants explore the principles and models of appreciative inquiry, an inquiry-centred and strengths-based approach to change, problem-solving and leadership. Participants work with practical conceptual tools to enable new possibilities in their work with families and within their workplace.

Who should attend? Human service workers in government and community agencies across the child protection, family support, youth work and domestic and family violence sectors; and their team leaders, senior practitioners and managers.

“ Fantastic workshop. I really enjoyed it and felt it was extremely helpful to my role with families. ”

TBC

Keeping Hope Alive - vicarious trauma and emotional wellbeing in human services practice

The concept of 'vicarious trauma' is used to describe the emotional and psychological impact of working in the human services. Those who have chosen careers that require them to care about the plight of others often endure a significant impact on their own emotional health. However few of us have had the opportunity to learn about these complex processes, to reflect on our own personal experiences of caring, and, most importantly, to learn and implement strategies which allow us to practice our unique profession in ways which are safe, sustainable, and which celebrate the privilege of helping others. This workshop is presented by Matthew J Armstrong, who has researched vicarious trauma and delivered papers on the topic at national and international conferences.

Who should attend? Workers in human services who regularly assist adults, children or young people who experience trauma. Includes strategies for child protection and family welfare workers, teachers, foster carers, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander groups, private practitioners, and administrative staff.

“ Great workshops by vibrant, effective presenters – a fantastic program all round. ”

31/05/2018

Effective Supervision For Supervisors – being the best you can be!

Supervisors in the area of child, youth and family welfare commonly learn how to supervise solely through 'on the job' experience. Their main source of knowledge may be their own experiences of being supervised. This interactive one-day workshop helps supervisors in child and family welfare and youth services to understand supervision as a specific area of practice and to develop their practice skills in this area. Participants consider contemporary thinking and knowledge around supervision frameworks and models and are supported to use this in developing their supervision practice approach.

Who should attend? Government and community agency workers currently supervising staff, new supervisors and workers interested in taking on a supervisory role.

21/06/2018

Working with Complexity – parents with mental health, substance use & family violence issues

Frontline workers confront increasingly complex family situations where the safety of children and young people is linked to serious and seemingly chronic parental issues. These issues can also complicate engagement, relationship-based practice, goal-setting and planning. This workshop considers practice skills in working with families to make a difference, when parental issues relate to the often concurrent issues of mental health, substance misuse and family violence. This workshop reflects upon frameworks for understanding parental functioning, including complexity and change theory, and considers how best to respond to the needs of children in these circumstances. Workshop content is evidence-based and focuses on decision making which balances safety with least intrusive intervention.

Who should attend? Child protection workers in government and community agencies, including investigation and assessment, Family and Child Connect intensive family support, statutory intervention services, Family Wellbeing Services, foster and kinship care support services and reunification services.

“Very relevant and useful. Practical examples reinforced concepts being presented”

28/06/2018

First-Up – client response training for administration staff

Administration workers are often the first persons with whom a client or potential client of your agency will have contact. When that initial contact is by an upset, highly anxious or angry client, it is not easy to find the right response. This workshop equips and supports administration workers in their role of providing ‘first-up’ responses to clients and members of the public who present in person at reception or over the phone. We consider how to interact calmly and safely with people who are presenting in a state of crisis or affected by alcohol or drugs, including how to convey empathy while encouraging the client to contain their anger or upset or behaviour. A workshop for all admin workers who may be ‘first-up’ in responding helpfully in difficult situations or helping to de-escalate potential crises.

Who should attend? Administration workers in human service agencies who have direct ‘front counter’ or telephone contact with clients and members of the public.

02/08/2018

Family Ties – working with kinship and relative carers

We all acknowledge the principle that children and young people who need care are best placed with kin, if there are family members who can provide safety and help meet their emotional needs. However there are some challenges to be overcome! Achieving positive family contact with parents can be tricky, and research tells us that reunification planning can be more difficult than with non-relative carers. Family of origin patterns of interaction, and long-standing issues around relationships and the meanings attributed to past events, can be complicated. Cultural and customary kinship roles add a further dimension. This workshop puts the spotlight on the particular issues which workers must address for kinship care to work well, and considers strategies to assist all parties to focus on the child’s needs irrespective of ‘family’ issues.

Who should attend? Workers in any agency working with kinship carers to actively support their care of children and young people, government and community services, Indigenous and non-Indigenous licensed care services.

“Great development of ideas and discussion of concepts.
I really enjoyed it and found it a great way to think about my practice.”

TBC

Tuning In to Acting Out – responding to the behaviours and needs of young people

This advanced workshop assumes that participants have a working knowledge of the impacts of disrupted attachment, trauma and loss upon young people in care or disengaged from family. We know that these issues underpin the often challenging behaviour of these young people. But how best to respond? This workshop takes a very practical approach to applying this theoretical knowledge in everyday work with troubled young people. It considers effective behaviour guidance, staying safe when behaviour is extreme, and responding to behavioural crises in ways which apply the evidence about 'what works' in addressing the underlying causes of the behaviour.

Who should attend? Experienced workers in both government and community services working with young people, including youth workers, direct care workers in residential services for young people, statutory child protection and juvenile justice workers.

“Fleshing out the issues with real-life scenarios was excellent and made me see things differently.”

14/11/2018

Bridging Troubled Waters – resolving workplace issues and difficult team dynamics

Positive team dynamics underpin effective workgroups and when all is well, we may take this harmony for granted. But when conflict or personality clashes persist, everyone is affected and productivity can plummet. This workshop considers the tricky issues in managing workplace conflict and tension and restoring harmony. How do you engage 'difficult' workers who do not respond to the usual supervisory efforts to address unacceptable behaviour. How do you use your own personality and negotiation skills to ensure fair dealing while getting to the source of trouble? What strategies and techniques might help? This workshop is for competent supervisors who need a few more 'tricks up their sleeve' for resolving workgroup issues and for those who want to avoid such issues arising.

Who should attend? Team leaders, supervisors and managers responsible for workgroups in both government and community agencies.

TBC

Digging Deeper - risk assessment and strengths-based family work

Is risk assessment still relevant in child protection when you work from a strengths-based framework with families? Of course! Assessing risk remains at the core of protecting children and young people. Yet what some find tricky is how to integrate the risk assessment process with a strengths-oriented approach to practice. This workshop 'digs deeper' into this question, reviewing contemporary understandings of the concepts and skills critical to risk assessment and exploring how to successfully enact these in practice while working to engage with families around the safety of their children. The complexities of this work are enormous, as is the responsibility to 'get it right'. This workshop provides the opportunity to explore your understanding and approach to risk assessment and where it fits with frameworks for inclusive engagement and work with families.

Who should attend? Frontline child safety workers, team leaders and managers, in statutory and community services. Child Safety, Family and Child Connect, Intensive Family Support services and any personnel across government and community sectors who have responsibility for risk assessment in the context of working to support families.

Converging Currents – effective work at the interface of domestic and family violence and child protection

Front-line workers in domestic and family violence and child protection share a deep concern around issues of safety, danger and risk for families with children. Their work is steeped in strong and similar values around a paramount right to safety, voice and empowerment. They frequently work with highly vulnerable families at the same time. Yet, when their work converges at the frontline it is not uncommon to see workers become caught in a whirlpool of professional tension and families thrown off course by a lack of integration and connection. This interactive workshop supports professionals from both sectors in considering how to come together in their work at the front-line in a practical way that feels 'joined-up' for families and helps to secure the common goals of safety and well-being. Workshop content is framed within ongoing legislative and policy reform in both sectors and informed by contemporary thinking and innovative practice.

Who should attend? Front-line workers, their team leaders, senior practitioners and managers across the domestic and family violence, child protection and family support sectors.

01/11/2018

DNA – development 'N' attachment for child protection work

Together, child development and attachment theory form a critical cornerstone underpinning practice across child protection, family support and youthwork. Yet many workers say they have only a hazy understanding of critical theoretical concepts and little real idea of how to use these in their practice. This new one day workshop draws on contemporary developments in research and theory to provide a practical working knowledge of child development and attachment for frontline child protection workers. Participants explore the implications of theoretical concepts for assessment and intervention and consider how to integrate theory with daily practice in their specific role.

Who should attend? Front-line workers, their team leaders and senior practitioners across the child protection, family support and youth sectors.

“ Everything about these workshops was of great interest and I am looking forward to taking it all back to my work colleagues. ”

Workshops not currently scheduled but available for delivery on request

On request

Playing It Safe – child safety risk management for educators (two hours)

Every school and childcare service has a duty of care and legal obligations around ensuring the safety of children and young people from abuse. The educators and others involved will be aware of the child protection policy – but is this enough? We know that sexual, physical and emotional abuse of children and young people can occur in school and childcare settings. Educators also have the responsibility of being alert to the needs of children and young people who may be at risk at home. This short workshop goes beyond the basics and assists your key people – teachers, group leaders, in-home educators – to not only recognise child protection issues, but also to respond appropriately to the children and young people relying upon their vigilance.

Who should attend? This workshop is aimed at schools and childcare services, of all types and across the P-12 spectrum. Contact us to arrange a suitable time for us to come to you, including evenings.

“The training was excellent as it provided a wealth of practical strategies along with theoretical frameworks.”

On request

Child Sexual Abuse – dilemmas and decisions (one day)

Judgments about the safety needs of children in families where sexual abuse is alleged, or has occurred outside the family, can be extraordinarily difficult to make. This one-day workshop considers the many factors to be assessed in arriving at a defensible decision, within a framework which integrates both knowledge of the dynamics of families affected by sexual abuse and the sometimes conflicting needs of children and young people.

Who should attend? Child protection workers in government and community agencies, including investigation and assessment, intensive family support, statutory intervention services, foster and kinship care support and reunification services.

“It was great having a facilitator who held my interest all day with excellent skills and knowledge about what was presented.”

On Request

For The Record – effective report-writing for child and youth work (half day)

Report writing ranges from assessment reports, internal accounting for actions taken (such as incident reports), summaries of work done with a family or young person (progress reports and final reports), advocacy and referral reports and court reports (including affidavits). All family and youth workers will at some time have to produce a well-argued report that gets your message across, either presenting a case on behalf of the client or presenting a well-articulated set of conclusions and recommendations. This workshop takes a highly practical approach to examining the structure and elements of any good report.

Who should attend? Government and community agency workers, family support workers, youth workers, foster and kinship care support, intervention service workers.

On request

Building the Picture for educators – identifying and responding to harm and sexual behaviour (half-day)

This workshop equips educators with knowledge and skills to meet mandatory training requirements for identifying and responding to harm. It considers concepts of abuse/neglect and likely harm to children, within the context of legal requirements and duty of care. It explores children's sexual development and distinguishes between normal and problem sexual behaviour, providing a framework that guides educators in responding to all types of sexual behaviour including problematic behaviour. There is opportunity for participants to discuss behaviour and concerns encountered in work settings so that they leave the workshop with more confidence and potential solutions.

Who should attend? Child care educators, child care directors, family day care educators, outside school hours (OSHC) educators and directors.

“ Thank you for one of the best workshops I've been to in terms of information and relevance ”

On request

Building Bridges – child protection practice for educators (one-day)

This workshop is specifically designed for teachers and school personnel. The concept of 'building bridges' acknowledges the roles of educators as conduits between home and school in promoting student wellbeing. This workshop covers legislative requirements for identifying and responding to harm to students, along with core concepts of effective child protection practice. Case scenarios guide participants to consider child protection risk and protective factors, to determine risk of significant harm and to decide the most appropriate course of action. We consider contemporary research about how best to support families within the school community to help prevent child protection crises.

Who should attend? Teachers, principals, school counsellors, school nurses and designated student protection officers.

“ Very clear, easy to understand, practical, will be able to implement in work place. ”

On request

The Silver Sessions – extending your expertise in risk assessment (two-days)

We invite experienced child protection practitioners to take time out to consider contemporary and emerging knowledge around risk assessment and how this applies in practice. The Silver Sessions supports those with existing expertise to push the boundaries of their knowledge and skill base, so assumes participants have a good understanding of fundamental concepts in child protection risk assessment and considerable on-the-job experience. This workshop is an opportunity for reflection and critical thinking about issues connected with what we know (and don't yet know) about managing risk while intervening at the appropriate level for a particular child or young person.

Who should attend? People in senior child protection practice roles, in government and community. Team leaders, senior practitioners and managers in child and youth protection and alternative care.

On request

Starlight, Starbright – practice tools for change in families (one-day)

You have your case plan and are home visiting regularly, but what should you actually be doing when you see your families? You know there must be more to it than having a chat about how everything is going. How do you help families “make the change”? Illuminate, brighten and shine up your practice by participating in this very practical workshop that explores the “how-to’s” of real work with families to achieve outcomes. During this workshop you will have the opportunity to be introduced to a range of practical techniques and tools that you can implement with families during home visits. By the end of this skills-oriented workshop you will have new strategies in your “tool kit” for immediate use in your practice with families in seeking the change they want to achieve.

Who should attend? Family support workers; government and community agency workers providing early intervention and support services.

“ I feel extremely motivated and informed - the entire content will be used - thank you. ”

On request

Y Links – engaging young people with family and community (one-day)

If you work with young people, you have one of the most challenging and yet rewarding of jobs. You must respect young people’s rights to autonomy while having a developmental focus and also taking into account issues such as trauma and loss which influence individual needs. This workshop looks in particular at how to support young people to make positive linkages with family and community to help meet identified needs. We examine the concept of ‘optimal connectedness’ and what this means in tricky situations where family functioning appears counter to a young person’s interests. We consider the balancing act of working through relationship to support sustainable connections with others, especially with ‘disconnected’ young people and those whose lives are impacted by complex issues.

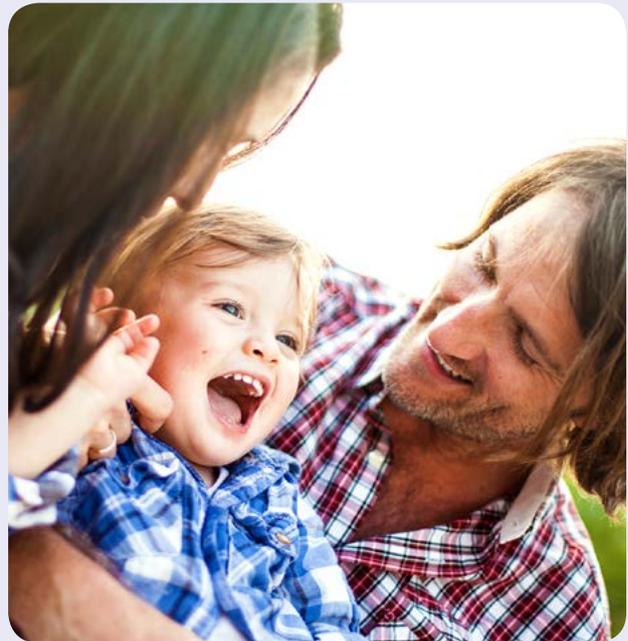

Who should attend? Workers in youth support services, child safety and residential care workers, transition to independence workers, youth justice officers, youth counsellors, community workers with a focus on youth work.

Encompass offers Circle of Security Parenting® program for parents!

COSP® is an 8 week program focussed on the parent/child relationship and the underpinning needs of children. Paula Redford-Bell and Anita Webster are both accredited and experienced facilitators of COSP® groups for parents of children at-risk or in care.

Circle of Security Parenting® provides a roadmap to understanding children's behaviour and implements decades of attachment research in an accessible step-by-step process, with video examples of parent/child interaction, healthy options in caregiving, and animated graphics. The program is designed to:

- help parents improve their observational and inferential skills
- facilitate empathy, by shifting a parent's focus from the child's behaviour to their inferred emotional needs
- enhance the reflective functioning of the parent
- provide parents with metaphors to assist in their own emotional regulation.

Circle of Security was developed by Glen Cooper, Kent Hoffman, & Bert Powell. Further information can be obtained from www.circleofsecurity.net.

Contact us for more information about running a Circle of Security Parenting® program for the parents with whom your organisation is working.

“Facilitation was wonderful – excellent resources and client centred practice strategies.”
